President Coming.

Henry Watterson has been named honorary chairman and William Marshall Bullitt chairman of the committee to arrange for the reception of President Wilson and other notables upon the occasion of their arrival in Kentucky to participate in ceremonies incidental to turning Lincoln Farm, Hodgenville, over to the United States Government Sept. 4.

Lieut. A. Utley, of Co. E, Madisonville, failed to pass.

Miss Mary Hainsey, aged 19, of Clearfield, Pa., went to the depot and kissed a trainload of soldiers, 971 out of 1,031, passing through the town, all strangers to her, taking them as they came, and had to be pulled off the platform of the moving train, leaving 80 of the sweating and travel-stained soldiers unkissed.

DO YOU KNOW THAT

Better wages make better health? Better health makes better citizens? Better citizens make a better nation? The U. S. Public Health Service found 78 per cent of the rural homes in a certain county unprovided with sanitary conveniences of any kind? Cholera is spread in the same manner as typhoid fever? Scarlet fever kills over 10,000 Americans each year? Hookworm enters through the skin? He who builds up health lays up treasure in the Bank of Nature?

Commission Form Loses.

Georgetown, Ky., July 17.—At a special election held Thursday the commission form of school government proposed for Georgetown lost by 58 votes.

SHIFTING THE SCENERY

By CATHERINE CRANMER.

"Positively my last appearance this season at a stupid, so-called 'at home,' Betty Barnes dropped among the pillows on the cretonne-covered couch in her mother's bedroom, and pulled off her long gloves with languid jerks.

"Surely you don't mean that Mrs. Mason's 'at home' was anything but a success?" Her mother's response was both a protest and an inquiry.

"Too successful," was Betty's bored reply. "That's one reason it was tiresome. But I'm tired of being a detail in the stage setting for some woman ambitious to put over on her gullible guests either her money or her brains or her marriageable daughters."

"You're desperately disappointing, Betty. Keep up such conduct another season and you'll be worse than a stage fixture; you'll be forced clear out of the wings."

"Then perhaps I'll strike up an acquaintance with the stage hands or the newspaper reporters or somebody else who can be spontaneous and interesting."

"Please don't remind me of your scandalous conduct at the Lafayette club dinner dance. I should never get over it if the Markhams and Browns found out that it was you who gave the information about their feud to that impertinent young scrub reporter."

"Cub reporter, mother," corrected Betty, "and that very story promoted him from the cub class."

"We will not discuss this matter now," Mrs. Barnes exuded finality in her tone and manner. "The Markhams are dining with us this evening. I shall expect you to be decently cordial."

By the time the second course was served, Mrs. Markham produced her conversation trump—the latest book.

"Have you read that piece of effrontery, 'Maneuvering for First Place'?"

Mrs. Barnes pleaded such a busy week with club committees that she had not even heard of the book. Betty offered a meek affirmative and Mr. Barnes surprised them all with his reply.

"I read it yesterday on the train coming from Chicago," he said. "When I found that Betty had put it in my traveling bag along with my favorite copy of Hazlitt, I felt like spanking her, but I'll have to confess that the audacious title page carried me right into the first chapter and that carried me on through the book."

"Well, don't you think it the most audacious slap at society imaginable?" Mrs. Markham's indignation was deep and dignified.

"Frankly," said Mr. Barnes, with a smile, "I thought it was a pretty good hit at us for allowing ourselves to put too much stress on nonessentials."

"Who wrote it?" demanded Mrs. Barnes, ready for hostilities.

"It's anonymous, but supposed to have been written by a group of people who style themselves 'The Social Spy Squad.'"

The talk drifted to other subjects, and just as the dinner was over a telephone message summoned the Markhams home on account of an accident to one of the children; so the bridge game that invariably followed dinner had to be abandoned.

Mr. Barnes resumed reading his unfinished evening paper. Betty bustled herself with some loose engravings and Mrs. Barnes picked up the new book that had been discussed at dinner.

"If everyone else is reading this I suppose I'll have to read it, too," she began, but the next instant stiffened, for in the doorway appeared Barnaby Wood, whom she mentally termed the upstart young "scrub" reporter referred to in her conversation with Betty before dinner. He looked tall, straight and assured, though decidedly pale. Immediately after the first formal greetings were over, he startled them all by saying that before Mrs. Barnes began the book he and Betty would like to make a confession.

"She has given me the right to call her that," he said, as he approached Betty's side, "and we want to ask you and Mr. Barnes now to consent to our marriage."

"And your means of support?" asked John Barnes.

"Why, daddy," broke in Betty, "our book is already in the fourteenth thousand, and the publishers say it will go to fifty within the month." Then, in confusion, she covered her blushing face with both her hands, and dropped them as her father spoke.

"I never knew before that you were the son of the fellow I knew at college as 'Squire John Wood,' but I'll confess I did suspect you two of being accomplices in that 'Maneuvering for First Place.' Mother, shall we let this squad of spies escape and cast their lots together for life?"

"Only on condition that they keep their crime a secret, and shift the scene of future stories away from my social set," Mrs. Barnes named her conditions in all seriousness.

"Oh, we've already shifted the scenery to the working classes in our new book," said Betty, smiling on everybody at once. Her mother's only response was a shake of the head, but presently she and Mr. Barnes left Betty and Barnaby to themselves, and for the moment both extremes of society were entirely forgotten by the two young reformers.

ANGORA GOATS

Government Studies Go a Grazing on National Forests

In connection with the effort to introduce the best methods of handling all classes of live stock on the National Forests, a study of the goat industry has been inaugurated by officials in charge who say that in parts of the Southwest large number of Angora goats are raised for their hair. In 1915 over fifty thousand of the animals were grazed on National Forests in six States.

The goats raised in the West feed mostly on brushy undergrowth, which they are said to like even better than the succulent grass found in the same region. On this account, the Forest Service officials say that in many places the goats are really desirable, as they thin out the dense brush and allow grass to get started. In a number of instances, it is stated, new cattle range will be provided.

Many people think that the foresters have been opposed to letting goats range on the National Forest, but officials say that this is not true. In some places, particularly in hardwood regions, goats damage young forest growth. In many of the coniferous forests of the West, however, this damage is slight if the range is not overstocked and the animals are properly handled. Often, it is said, they are of real benefit in keeping down inflammable brush and thus aid in protecting forests from fire.

The goats are grazed in bands of 600 to 2,500, though the smaller herds are more common. Sheds are necessary during the kidding season, since the newly born kids are almost as helpless as babies and must be protected from the cold and wet. After they get to be six or eight weeks old it is hard to kill them with a club, as one ranger put it.

When the kids are small they are not allowed to run with their mothers. Sometimes they are kept in a corral just high enough to prevent them from jumping out, but low enough to allow the nannies to jump in. Often each kid is tied out to a stake and the mother comes in during the day so the kid can have its dinner.

When grown the goats have considerable more agility and courage than sheep and fight off coyotes and other predatory animals.

Most of the goats are raised for their hair which brings from 20 to 50 cents a pound, according as fashion dictates that mohair and alepaca is or is not to be worn. The average cut of hair is said to be about 2½ pounds per animal.

Unlike sheep, which can go long periods without water, the goat must have water frequently and their range has to be planned with this in mind. The herding, it is said, has been considered a lazy man's job. In the past the animals have been given little attention and some owners still follow the old plan.

Under new methods which are being tried, the herders must take more care of their flocks. The goats are not allowed to spend more than one night in succession at one camp, and are handled in such a way that all the range is used, but not over grazed. Officials who are watching the experiments say that the approved methods will doubtless enable the owners to derive greater profits from their herds and make it possible to better the condition of the range.

Villa in the Saddle.

Two Villa bands attacked Carranza garrisons at Rosario and Parral but in both cases were beaten off with losses, according to official reports of Gen. Trevino. No doubt remains in the minds of the military authorities that Villa is directing the campaign along the Durango-Chihuahua border.

It was asserted that every effort of the de facto government would be made in an attempt to effect his capture.

TRIBUTE TO REV. J. N. JESSUP

(In appreciation of his love for our Soldier Boys.)

July 17, 1916.

If you have a friend worth loving, Love him and tell him so,

That his heart may beat responsive To your heart's fervent glow.

Don't wait until tomorrow, For then it may be too late,

His soul may pass out in the night-time And enter Heaven's golden gate.

Today with its opportunities May never be ours again,

To lay love's glowing tribute At the feet of our leader and friend!

So to our pastor for his love and service,

This tribute I bring to thee In the name of Our Christ and his dear old church,

Whose friend you have proven to be.

May our faith and fidelity tell you, As no words of mine can tell,

That we love and honor you, our teacher, And the work you do so well.

Our faith may waver my Brother, And our fidelity drift into the past,

But the memory of love's sweet token With life through Eternity will last.

And when to that celestial city, We as humble soldiers can go,

May you as our gallant Captain Lead us safely through the door.

—Mrs. L. T. Jenkins.

Fred Warde.

Manager Stockley gave his patrons an unusually good bill Saturday, presenting the eminent tragedian Fred Warde in Silas Marner. Mr. Warde is well known here, having been on the stage and platform in Hopkinsville many times in the last 30 years. They were glad to see the old veteran in the movies.
